Plot, Setting, and Character

What makes you willing to spend two hours at the movie theater or a week reading a book? Is it the thrill of action-packed events or a connection to the characters? Is it a fascination with the setting, such as a faraway galaxy? Plot, conflict, setting, and characters all play a role in holding your interest in a story.

Part 1: What Drives a Story?

The idea for a story might begin with an observation or a thought that interests a writer. To build a story from that idea, a writer creates a plot structure using the elements of fiction listed here.

- Setting is the time and place of the action. The time might be the historical era, the season, or the time of day. The place might be a country, a neighborhood, or a room. In many stories, setting influences the plot and affects the characters’ feelings.
- Characters are the people, animals, or imaginary creatures that take part in a story. The characters’ behavior affects what happens.
- Plot is the series of events in a story. The plot usually centers on a conflict, a struggle between different forces. Conflict fuels the action, moving the plot forward. A conflict can be external or internal.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>TYPE OF CONFLICT</th>
<th>EXAMPLE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>External Conflict&lt;br&gt;is a struggle between a character and an outside force. This force might be another character, a group of characters, or nature.</td>
<td>A sea captain attempts to guide his boat to shore in the middle of a deadly storm.&lt;br&gt;(sea captain vs. nature)&lt;br&gt;Other Examples&lt;br&gt;- A boxer faces an opponent.&lt;br&gt;- A girl has a fight with friends.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Internal Conflict&lt;br&gt;is a struggle within a character’s mind. This kind of conflict happens when a character must deal with opposing thoughts or feelings.</td>
<td>A girl strongly disagrees with her friends, but she wants them to like her. Should she speak her mind or stay silent?&lt;br&gt;(girl vs. herself)&lt;br&gt;Other Examples&lt;br&gt;- Admit needing help or do it alone?&lt;br&gt;- Take a risk or play it safe?</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
MODEL 1: SETTING

This author draws you into the story by providing specific details about the setting. How might the setting influence what happens?

---

from The Clay Marble

Novel by Minfong Ho

The last rays of afternoon sun were filtering through the forest as we approached the Border. Gradually the trees thinned out and the path widened. Several trails merged into ours. It seemed as if all the paths out of Cambodia were converging on this one spot on the Thai border.

I could barely contain my excitement. I imagined mountains of rice lining the horizon, and piles of tools and fishnets everywhere. Perhaps there would even be mounds of sweet moist coconut cakes and banana fritters. “Hurry,” I urged my brother.

Yet, as we finally emerged from the forest, all we could see was a vast barren plain dotted with shrubs and scraggly trees, flat and desolate.

---

MODEL 2: CONFLICT

Here, a girl watches from the deck of a ship as her brother is left on a deserted island. What do you learn about the conflict in this excerpt?

---

from Island of the Blue Dolphins

Novel by Scott O’Dell

Against my will, I screamed.

Chief Matasaip grasped my arm.

“We cannot wait for Ramo,” he said. “If we do, the ship will be driven on the rocks.”

“We must!” I shouted. “We must!”

“The ship will come back for him on another day,” Matasaip said.

“He will be safe. There is food for him to eat and water to drink and places to sleep.”

“No,” I cried.

Matasaip’s face was like stone. He was not listening.

---

Close Read

1. What details about the setting do you find in lines 1–4? One detail has been boxed.

2. Describe what the narrator expects to see when she crosses the border. Then describe what she actually sees. How might the actual setting affect the narrator and the story?

---

Close Read

1. Describe the conflict the girl experiences.

2. Is the girl’s conflict internal or external? Explain how you know.
Part 2: Plot Development

No matter who the characters are, where the action takes place, or what conflicts occur, a story has a plot. Usually, a story begins by introducing a main character who has a conflict. The story then develops around this conflict. Important events move the story forward, often explaining past or present actions, and foreshadowing, or hinting at, future actions. As the story moves on, the character must find a solution to the conflict. Once the problem is solved, the story ends. This process is known as plot development.

A typical plot has five stages of action. By understanding these stages, you will know what to look for in a story as you follow it closely. For example, at the beginning—or exposition—of a story, pay attention to the details that tell you about the characters, the setting, and any potential conflicts.

---

EXPOSITION
- Introduces the setting and the characters
- Sets up or hints at the conflict

RISING ACTION
- Shows how the conflict unfolds and becomes more complicated
- Builds suspense

CLIMAX
- Is the most exciting moment and the turning point
- Often results in a change for the main character

FALLING ACTION
- Eases suspense
- Reveals how the main character begins to resolve the conflict

RESOLUTION
- Ties up loose ends
- Sometimes offers an unexpected twist before the story ends
from Last Cover
Short story by Paul Annixter

I’m not sure I can tell you what you want to know about my brother; but everything about the pet fox is important, so I’ll tell all that from the beginning.

It goes back to a winter afternoon after I’d hunted the woods all day for a sign of our lost pet. I remember the way my mother looked up as I came into the kitchen. Without my speaking, she knew what had happened. For six hours I had walked, reading signs, looking for a delicate print in the damp soil or even a hair that might have told of a red fox passing that way—but I had found nothing.

from The Third Wish
Short story by Joan Aiken

One evening he was returning home along the river path when he saw Leita in front of him, down by the water. A swan had sailed up to the verge and she had her arms round its neck and the swan’s head rested against her cheek. She was weeping, and as he came nearer he saw that tears were rolling, too, from the swan’s eyes.

“Leita, what is it?” he asked, very troubled.

“This is my sister,” she answered. “I can’t bear being separated from her.”

Now he understood that Leita was really a swan from the forest, and this made him very sad because when a human being marries a bird it always leads to sorrow.
Part 3: Analyze the Text

In this story, an elegant dinner party turns dangerous when an uninvited “guest” makes an appearance. As you read, use what you’ve just learned about plot, conflict, and setting to analyze the story.

Close Read
Exposition (Lines 1–13)

1. What do you learn about the setting in the exposition?

2. Explain what the young girl and the colonel are arguing about in lines 5–13. What might this topic foreshadow?

Close Read
Rising Action (Lines 14–36)

3. Find two details in lines 14–19 that might foreshadow future events in the story. One detail has been boxed.
No one else sees this, nor the boy when he puts a bowl of milk on the verandah outside the glass doors. The American comes to with a start. In India, milk in a bowl means only one thing. It is bait for a snake. He realizes there is a cobra in the room.

He looks up at the rafters—the likeliest place—and sees they are bare. Three corners of the room, which he can see by shifting only slightly, are empty. In the fourth corner a group of servants stand, waiting until the next course can be served. The American realizes there is only one place left—under the table.

His first impulse is to jump back and warn the others. But he knows the commotion will frighten the cobra and it will strike. He speaks quickly, the quality of his voice so arresting that it sobers everyone.

"I want to know just what control everyone at this table has. I will count three hundred—that's five minutes—and not one of you is to move a single muscle. The persons who move will forfeit 50 rupees. Now! Ready!"

The 20 people sit like stone images while he counts. He is saying "...two hundred and eighty..." when, out of the corner of his eye, he sees the cobra emerge and make for the bowl of milk. Four or five screams ring out as he jumps to slam shut the verandah doors.

"You certainly were right, Colonel!" the host says. "A man has just shown us an example of real control."

"Just a minute," the American says, turning to his hostess, "there's one thing I'd like to know. Mrs. Wynnes, how did you know that cobra was in the room?"

A faint smile lights up the woman's face as she replies. "Because it was lying across my foot."