

1. This question has two parts. Answer Part A first. Then answer Part B.

Part A What is the author's view of Margaret Bourke-White in this passage?

- A She took many risks and managed to survive, but her work suffered because she moved around so often.
- B She was a remarkable woman who used a camera to tell some important stories.
- C She loved to travel and enjoyed new adventures, but she never settled down.
- D She defied common traditions in business to become a woman photographer and make a fortune.

Part B Which sentence from the passage supports the answer to Part A?

- A In the early 1930s, the Soviet Union was largely closed to outsiders.
- B Born in New York City in 1904, Margaret learned to be brave and daring from her mother.
- C As Life's first staff photographer, she now had to learn to make news photographs.
- D Her famous photos of the camp's survivors brought the horrors of war home to Americans.

2. What is the main point of the photo called "World's Highest Standard of Living"?

- A It contrasts the lives of prosperous Americans with poor people standing in a line waiting for food.
- B It shows the ideal life that all Americans wanted to have in the 1930s.
- C It suggests that people who work hard enough can be successful.
- D It shows the difference between life in America and life in other countries.