

An unidentified woman uses her “tipping cane” also known as a “cane flask” during Prohibition to secretly pour liquor into her cup. February 13, 1922. Washington, D.C.

In Chicago, organized crime grew rich and powerful from from importing Canadian alcohol from across the Great Lakes and then selling the illegal, “bootlegged” alcohol in the US.

Copyright, 1919, by George Matthew Adams Service

Morris for George Matthew Adams Service

Who is going to take care of it?

In keeping with the tradition of political parties using donkeys and elephants as mascots, the mascot of the Prohibition Party was the camel, since camels don't drink very much. This cartoon from 1919 shows the debate between government agencies about who would enforce it now that Prohibition has begun