

Fast Food in the Philippines

Globalization sometimes kills off local businesses. But some businesses survive by copying foreign ideas. This fast-food restaurant in the Philippines looks like an American chain. But it's owned by a local company. It now competes successfully with large fast-food chains.

Future of Globalization People often disagree about the One reason for this is that many poor countries see globalization as a path out of poverty. They have seen how countries like South Korea and Singapore have prospered from global trade. Both countries or to invest in businesses. Think about this as you look at the new investment move around the world. This money is used to build new factories or to invest in businesses. Every year, billions of dollars of foreign money coming into a country now moves freely around the world. Another reason is that money moves freely around the world, probably as a result. Now other countries want to follow their example. These welcomed foreign companies. Both saw their economies grow rapidly as a result. Now other countries wait to follow their example.

Globalization is here to stay. And it's likely to increase.

What they need.

E-sufficiency. They may get into wars in order to maintain the supply of others for a major trade good, such as oil. This can make them less interested in arts and languages may be lost. Some countries depend on others for a major trade good by foreign foods, movies, or music. Weakened nations too dependent on others. A country's culture may make nations too dependent on others. A country's culture may be to other places to find work.

Jobs. Many Americans have lost their jobs because of factory closings. Towns and cities may also suffer when unemployed residents leave. When companies send work offshore, they often close factories. Some. When companies send work offshore, they often close factories. Finally, globalization can upset traditional ways of life.
