And make sure she naps.' Sexism is internalized." If women assume that we can do anything men can do (backwards and in heels, a la Ginger Rogers versus Fred Astaire,) and that we are superior in the home, we will never actually value men enough for them to experience the rewards of being fully equally partners. As my teenage sons frequently remind me, sexism cuts both ways.

Abigail Rine says it best. She finds nothing either revolutionary or negative in Kelly Makino's decision to stay home to take care of children, but she rejects the idea that that is necessarily a woman's decision to make. "What WOULD be revolutionary," Rine writes, "would be to stop seeing the home as a gendered space." Home should be as much an environment for men and women to share responsibility and pool talents as work is. We would all, including our children, be better off.

LATEST VIDEO

The Visa Uncertainty Holding Back Star Scientists

An Indian Ph.D. graduate is working on potentially lifesaving heart research. Will she be able to stay in the U.S. to complete it?

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

ANNE-MARIE SLAUGHTER is the president of the New America Foundation and the Bert G. Kerstetter '66 University Professor of Politics and International Affairs at Princeton University. She was previously the director of policy planning for the U.S. State Department and the dean of Princeton's Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs.

₩ Twitter