Claim: Smartphones should not be allowed in the classroom.

Smartphones should not be allowed in the classroom because they cause distractions. Firstly, the simple presence of a nearby cellphone can hamper one's ability to think properly. Kristen Duke describes an important study about smartphones: "Thus, merely having their smartphones out on the desk led to a small but statistically significant impairment of an individual's cognitive capacity--on par with the effects of lacking sleep"(Harvard Business Review). So having a smartphone nearby means that a person's thinking will be decreased as if she or he was foggy-minded from not sleeping enough the night before. Therefore, a student with a cellphone at his or her desk will not be able to think through a complicated geometry theorem. This is not a good formula for success in high school. In addition, many high school students have been found to confront this situation daily. Jennifer Betts says, "
