

church. Linda's responsible nature also extends to our family dog, Max. She not only faithfully exercises Max every evening but also pays for all his veterinary expenses. Pets and family are important to Linda.

Lastly, my sister volunteers for worthy causes to improve others' lives. Last summer, she joined Habitat for Humanity and once a month works on a crew rebuilding dilapidated houses for the homeless. Additionally, she helps to raise money for Paws with a Cause, an organization dedicated to training service dogs. I could go on with more examples of how she lends a helping hand to her community.

In summary, my sister, Linda, lives the life of a knight. Her actions toward others are comparable to knightly deeds and show that she is a caring person. Her honesty and responsibility make her a person someone can trust. She readily volunteers to help others have a better quality of life. Though she has never suited herself in armor, she is still a shining example of what a modern knight should be.

Sincerely,
